if the first kattoo album, 'places' (released a year ago), can be seen as a soundtrack to an imaginary tv movie then this second album could be described as a major blockbuster's soundtrack.

although 20 tracks are displayed on your cd player, 'megrim' should be enjoyed as one long 'track' consisting of 20 'parts' - without any pauses in between; a self-contained work of art.

once again, volker kahl's preference for classical music, well-placed samples, field recordings, clutching melody lines, varying rhythmic textures, drama and melancholy melt into a uniqueness that at times seems almost impossible.

on 'megrim', stylistic eclecticism is less ostensible. the integration of different cultures (for example: using aramaic and japanese voices) best describe the path kattoo is currently taking. but maybe this is just a theory - the artist volker kahl does not share much information, kattoo's music shall be the message.

electronic chamber music for the eclectic listener.
